Therefore, by definition,  $\text{Content}(\text{sub})$  is a subset of  $\text{Content}(\text{sup})$ . Therefore, the approximation of  $\text{Content}(\text{sub})$  by  $\frac{\text{Content}(\text{sub})}{\text{Content}(\text{sup})}$  is a rougher value of  $\text{Content}(\text{sub})$  than  $\text{Content}(\text{sub})$  itself. Therefore, this approximation is not of a good quality. A better approximation is  $\frac{\text{Content}(\text{sub})}{\text{Content}(\text{sub})}$ . Since  $\text{Content}(\text{sub})$  is a subset of  $\text{Content}(\text{sub})$ , it has a rougher approximation of  $\text{Content}(\text{sub})$ .

This and multiple independent assessments result in a number of ways to using information from existing use of water of value. That is, the opportunity cost of a water resource is the loss, or the foregone benefit, of a resource's opportunity cost of a number of other uses of the resource. For example, if a water resource is used for a particular purpose, the opportunity cost of that use is the loss of the benefit that could have been realized if the resource were used for a different purpose. The opportunity cost of a water resource is the loss of the benefit that could have been realized if the resource were used for a different purpose.

I hereby certify that the above information is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief, and I am not aware of any other information that would affect the accuracy of the above information.
