Activity 1: Acceleration in a Gravitational Field

Remember, acceleration is the change in velocity per unit time. Remember that the acceleration is constant in this thought experiment.

Knowledge: Is the gravity vector

Answer: Knowledge Question (Are these 2D/3D knowledge items?)

On the right side of the screen, click the button for the experiment with gravity as the force, and choose the two two-dimensional forces from the subject window, and transfer them to the right column box. Also, drag the unit Acceleration to the first empty position from the subject window.

1. Why do these two forces not produce the same acceleration?

The acceleration is due to the sum of the two forces. The force of gravity is the only force that produces the same gravity.

2. Now that we know why the acceleration is gravity, how do we describe the acceleration?

1. Gravity is the only force that is the only force that is the only force.
2. The acceleration is the only force that is the only force that is the only force.

Answer: Knowledge

From the subject window, drag the Acceleration button to the right column box. Also, drag the Acceleration button to the right column box. Also, drag the Acceleration button to the right column box. Also, drag the Acceleration button to the right column box.

So again, how do we describe the acceleration? The acceleration is the only force that is the only force that is the only force. The acceleration is the only force that is the only force that is the only force.

3. How do we describe the acceleration? The acceleration is the only force that is the only force that is the only force. The acceleration is the only force that is the only force that is the only force.

The acceleration is the only force that is the only force that is the only force.

4. How do we describe the acceleration? The acceleration is the only force that is the only force that is the only force.

It is the only force that is the only force that is the only force that is the only force.

5. How do we describe the acceleration? The acceleration is the only force that is the only force that is the only force.

The acceleration is the only force that is the only force that is the only force.
