1. The authors may also wish to include some more data, that is, to show the relationship between the number of publications and the number of citations. This would be a good idea, as it would allow the authors to see if the number of citations is proportional to the number of publications. This would also allow them to see if the number of citations is proportional to the number of publications, which would be a good idea.

There have been reports of outbreaks of acute diarrhoea and vomiting associated with drinking water from public fountains in Berlin. The water is treated with chlorine and is safe to drink. The outbreak is thought to be due to a contamination of the water supply system. The water supply system is being investigated and the water supply is being monitored.
