According to the American College of Cardiology/American Heart Association 2017 guidelines, which one of the following would be the most appropriate medication to initiate at this time?

- A) Clonidine (Catapres), 0.1 mg twice daily
- B) Hydralazine, 25 mg three times daily
- C) Lisinopril/hydrochlorothiazide (Zestoretic), 10/12.5 mg daily
- D) Metoprolol tartrate (Lopressor), 25 mg twice daily
- E) Triamterene (Dyrenium), 50 mg daily - ✓✓ANSWER: C

This patient has hypertension and according to both JNC 8 and American College of Cardiology/American Heart Association 2017 guidelines, antihypertensive treatment should be initiated. For the general non-African-American population, monotherapy with an ACE inhibitor, an angiotensin receptor blocker, a calcium channel blocker, or a thiazide diuretic would be appropriate for initial management. It is also appropriate to initiate combination antihypertensive therapy as an initial management strategy, although patients should not take an ACE inhibitor and an angiotensin receptor blocker simultaneously. Studies have shown that blood pressure control is achieved faster with the initiation of combination therapy compared to monotherapy, without an increase in morbidity. Lisinopril/hydrochlorothiazide would be an appropriate choice in this patient. -Blockers, vasodilators, -blockers, and potassium-sparing diuretics are not recommended as initial choices for the treatment of hypertension.

During rounds at the nursing home, you are informed that there are two residents on the unit with laboratory-confirmed influenza. According to CDC guidelines, who should receive chemoprophylaxis for influenza?

- A) Only symptomatic residents on the same unit
- B) Only symptomatic residents in the entire facility
- C) All asymptomatic residents on the same unit
- D) All residents of the facility regardless of symptoms

Technology, and Law, 2011-01-16 Today scores of companies primarily in the United States and Europe are offering whole genome scanning services directly to the public. The proliferation of these companies and the services they offer demonstrate a public appetite for this information and where the future of genetics may be headed they also demonstrate the need for serious discussion about the regulatory environment, patient privacy and other policy implications of direct to consumer (DTC) genetic testing. Rapid advances in genetic research already have begun to transform clinical practice and our understanding of disease progression. Existing research has revealed a genetic basis or component for numerous diseases including Parkinson's disease, Alzheimer's disease, diabetes, heart disease and several forms of cancer. The availability of the human genome sequence and the HapMap, plummeting costs of high throughput screening and increasingly sophisticated computational analyses have led to an explosion of discoveries of linkages between patterns of genetic variation and disease susceptibility. While this research is by no means a straight path toward better public health, improved knowledge of the genetic linkages has the potential to change fundamentally the way health professionals and public health practitioners approach the prevention and treatment of disease. Realizing this potential will require greater sophistication in the interpretation of genetic tests, new training for physicians and other diagnosticians and new approaches to communicating findings to the public. As this rapidly growing field matures, all of these questions require attention from a variety of perspectives. To discuss some of the foregoing issues, several units of the National Academies held a workshop on August 31 and September 1, 2009 to bring together a still developing community of professionals from a variety of relevant disciplines to educate the public and policy makers about this emerging field and to identify issues for future study. The meeting featured several invited presentations and discussions on the many technical, legal, policy and ethical questions that such DTC testing raises, including: 1) overview of the current state of knowledge and the future research trajectory; 2) shared genes and emerging issues in privacy; 3) the regulatory framework; and 4) education of the public and the medical community.
