Carburetor

The carburetor, especially designed for LP gas, mixes the correct proportions of LP gas vapor with air and automatically provides the volume in the right quantity to suit every engine demand. The carburetor also includes an accelerator, the valve of a pressure regulator, and a choke and starting system for starting purposes.

Adjusting the Carburetor and Regulator

There are three fuel adjustments. These adjustments are correctly set at the factory and should require no attention. If these adjustments have been disturbed in some manner, however, they can be correctly reset by following the instructions outlined below.

Starting adjustment and main fuel adjustment on the carburetor: (Refer to (introduction) for further details and see (instrumentation) for choke action. See (Figure 3).

Idle adjustment on the regulator: (Refer to (introduction) for further details and see (instrumentation) for choke action.

To reset the fuel adjustments

1. Loosen the lock nuts on the starting fuel adjustment and main fuel adjustment on the carburetor. Turn these adjusting screws, use the idle adjusting screw on the regulator all the way in.

carburetor.

2. Set the starting adjustment (needle) at a turn open, the main fuel adjustment (2-3 turns open), and the idle adjustment (on the regulator) one turn open.

3. Start the engine and when it is warm to the point as it is starts, retard the engine speed control lever until the engine is taken to the idle throttle stop screw (on the carburetor) (1/2 turn, 1/2). Check the idle fuel adjustment (on the regulator) and turn it to a point where the engine speed is highest and operates smoothly.

To adjust the main fuel adjustment, move the engine speed control lever to the fully adjusted position. Under normal conditions, the main adjustment should be 2-3 turns open to assure the smoothest operation. When the tractor is put under load it may be necessary to move this adjustment slightly to assure the best engine performance.

The starting adjustment may be varied to obtain instant starting if cold starts with the suggested adjustment are not satisfactory.
