- Abstract. Staphylococcus aureus (S. aureus) has been identified as a leading cause of nosocomial infections. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of S. aureus in the nasal cavities of patients in a tertiary care hospital. A total of 100 patients were screened for S. aureus colonization of the nasal cavity. The results showed that 60% of the patients were colonized with S. aureus. The colonization was found to be significantly higher in patients who had been in the hospital for more than 48 hours. The results of this study suggest that S. aureus colonization of the nasal cavity is a common occurrence in patients in a tertiary care hospital. This finding has implications for the prevention and control of nosocomial infections.

- Q2022 Transmittance measurements
 Transmittance measurements are made by passing a beam of light through a sample and measuring the intensity of the light that emerges. The transmittance is the ratio of the intensity of the light that emerges to the intensity of the light that enters the sample. Transmittance is usually expressed as a percentage. Transmittance measurements are used to determine the concentration of a substance in a solution. Transmittance measurements are also used to determine the purity of a substance.

- Background: The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems among the general population of the United Kingdom. The study was part of the 2007 British Household Panel Survey (BHPS), a nationally representative longitudinal survey of the British population.
