

The Digestive System

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, where it is exposed to bile secreted by the liver. The liver is a large organ on the right side of the abdomen. It produces bile, which is stored in the gallbladder. Bile then moves through the common bile duct into the duodenum.

Layers of large intestine

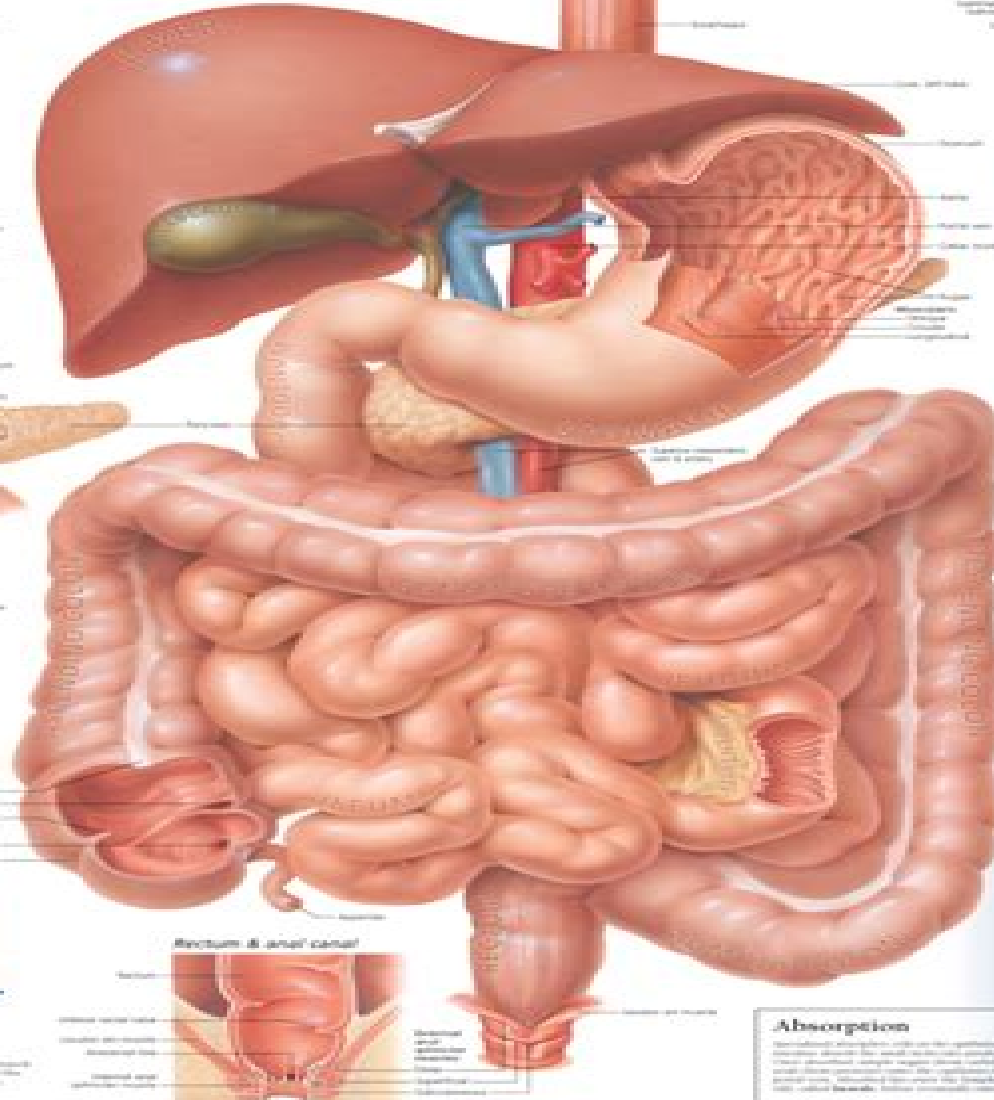

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the colon, and the rectum. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food, forming stool. The large intestine is located on the right side of the abdomen.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the wave action, which the stomach has shown.

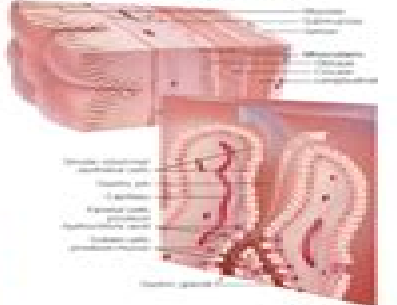

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing the food breaks it into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. Saliva, secreted by the salivary glands, helps in the digestion of food. It contains the enzyme amylase, which breaks down starch into sugar. Saliva also helps in the lubrication of the food, making it easier to swallow.

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the upper left part of the abdomen. Food enters the stomach through the esophagus and is broken down by the action of stomach acid and enzymes. The stomach also has the ability to expand to hold large amounts of food.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the central part of the abdomen. Food enters the small intestine through the duodenum and is broken down by the action of enzymes and bile. The small intestine is responsible for the absorption of nutrients from the food.

Absorption

The small intestine is responsible for the absorption of nutrients from the food. It has a large surface area due to the presence of villi, which are small finger-like projections. The villi are covered with a thin layer of cells called the intestinal lining, which allows for the absorption of nutrients into the bloodstream.
