HEAT EXCHANGERS

Types of Heat Exchangers

11-1C Heat exchangers are classified according to the flow type associated with exchanger flow, and/or the flow arrangement. In parallel flow, both hot and cold fluids enter the heat exchanger at the same end and flow in the same direction. In counter flow, the hot and cold fluids enter the heat exchanger at opposite ends and flow in opposite directions. In cross flow, the hot and cold fluids flow across parallel walls or tubes.

11-2C In terms of construction type, heat exchangers are classified as compact, shell and tube and regenerative heat exchangers. Compact heat exchangers are typically designed to obtain large heat transfer surface per unit volume. The major compact, cross-exchange heat exchangers are defined by structure. Chemically resistant aluminum heat exchangers are used for refrigerating and air conditioning. Shell and tube heat exchangers consist of large number of tubes passed in a shell which are connected in series or parallel. Regenerative heat exchangers transfer heat between passages of the heat exchanger through the same flow area. In compact heat exchangers, the heat transfer area is generally proportional to mass flow.

11-3C A heat exchanger is classified as having a capacity of 10^3 to 10^6 W/m² or 10^3 to 10^5 W/m² where Q is the rate of heat transfer and A is the area of the volume which is called the core volume. The core volume for double pipe heat exchangers varies from 10 to 1000 m³. The volume of core for compact is a constant heat exchanger.

11-4C In counter flow heat exchangers, the hot and the cold fluids move in opposite directions while both enter the heat exchanger at opposite ends and flow in opposite directions. In cross flow heat exchangers, the two fluids enter the heat exchanger at different points. This means flow is not in the same direction and the fluids flow across the shell or tube through a partition baffles, spacers and provide to flow entering the exchanger in different directions. Hence the fluid in flow exchanger is not continuous process, whereas flow is used in the shell.

11-5C In the shell and tube exchangers, both the fluids are typically placed in the shell or tube. The shell side fluid is flow across the shell in parallel, both internal and external conditions, however, the tubes, which are placed in the shell or tube, and are placed separately across the shell or tube in parallel flow. The other fluid flows, but they eliminate shell side and tube side heat transfer rate.

11-6C Using the data provided in shell and tube heat exchanger increases the heat transfer surface area and the rate of heat transfer increases. But it also increases the shell and tube costs.

11-7C Using the data provided increases the heat transfer rate per unit area and it is not necessary that heat of heat transfer.
