How is the monologue form effective in Allan Bennett's portrait of Doris in a Cream Cracker under the Settee?

As Allan Bennett has chosen to write about the character Doris in monologue form we learn a lot about her. She is the only character we hear from throughout the monologue so we learn about the way she speaks, the language she uses and her opinions.

Doris manages to constantly bring sanitation and cleanliness into the conversation, whatever the case, never forgetting to emphasize its importance. For example when her husband suggested getting a small bush for their garden the thing she was concerned about was how hygienic it would be.

"Never mind character, Wilfred, where does hygiene come on the agenda?"

She has a home help who is meant to take care of the cleaning in elderly Doris house, she is called Zuleema. Zuleema is made out to be a patronising person who has no respect for the elderly, and who tries to be an authoritarian. She sounds intimidating as Doris tells us she constantly threatens her with mentions of Stafford House, a retirement home.

"I am the only person that stands between you and Stafford House," Doris tells us Zuleema says.

Doris reacts with cheeky or sarcastic comments, letting us know that she is not bothered and knows that Zuleema is just trying to influence her.

"They don't put people in Stafford House just for running around with the Ewbank."

Doris doesn't want to be stuck in a place where she will be treated like an invalid. She has an opinion of the home, although it doesn't seem to be based on any real experiences.

"I don't want to be stuck with a lot of old lasses. And they all smell of pee. And daft half of them.... They even mix up your teeth."

The real reason she doesn't want to go to Stafford House is that she likes to be independent.

Doris tends to exaggerate events, such as threatening to use the cream cracker she finds under the settee as evidence to get rid of Zuleema.

"I've only got to send this cream cracker to the Director of social services and you'll be on the carpet. Same as the cream cracker." She pretends to say to Zuleima.

One of the things that Doris talks about is when she miscarried John. The nurse attending to Doris wasn't sensitive or
