✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Writing a scholarly research paper follows certain guidelines and format starting with a succinct abstract, introduction, literature review, methodology, results, discussion, and conclusion. However, some articles could have altered versions in their organization based on the nature of the study being reported. This paper is a critique of the article "The Experience of Implementing Evidence-Based Practice Change: A Qualitative Analysis" by Irwin et al. (2013).

The title of the article is a good one as it suggests the phenomena being studied (experience of implementing EBP change), even though it does not identify the group or community under study. However, the abstract does not concisely summarize the main features of the report, as it lacks the problem statement, methods, results, and conclusion. The abstract only mentions the purpose of the study. In the introduction, the problem statement is stated unambiguously, it is easy to identify. Given that the study sought to describe the experience of implementing an EBP change by analyzing verbatim narratives, a qualitative approach was appropriate. However, the researchers did not state the research questions, but their absence is justifiable given the nature of the study. Similarly, the authors did not give an elaborate literature review, even though they highlighted some information linked to the existing knowledge related to the topic in the introduction.

Conceptual or theoretical underpinnings were not defined and likewise, but the participants' identities were not divulged, which safeguards their rights. The nature of the study did not warrant the review of an IRB or ethics review board. In the research design, the participants' verbatim on their experiences when implementing EBP were collected and analyzed to identify recurring themes, and this design befits this form of a study. The researchers adequately identified the population being studied (nurses) placed in 19 teams, thus the sample was described in sufficient detail. The methods used in data gathering were appropriate with the right questions being asked and a sufficient amount of data gathered. The procedures of data collection and recording were adequately described. The researchers used effective strategies to improve the trustworthiness and integrity of the study to make the results auditable and confirmable.
