Bercha and

Associates,1978 The work consisted of the development of a reliability analysis capable of generating blowout probability predictions for artificial island and drillship drilling systems used for exploratory drilling in the south Beaufort Sea Human environmental and equipment failure risk factors were considered in the analysis The first phase of the work entailed collection and quantification of equipment and operator data on each of the systems together with associated meteorological and geological conditions The second phase consisted of a direct probabilistic risk analysis utilizing the fault tree technique In this technique only the probability of the most basic events need be specified Calculation of an ever increasing hierarchy of event probabilities up to a blowout event is then carried out using a digital network based on probabilistic logic The fault tree networks were modelled by means of a computer program to facilitate repetitive calculations of different ranges of input values required for the performance of a sensitivity analysis to identify the most critical factors in the risk system Blowout probabilities were found to range from 0015 per well for a blowout probably devoid of oil to 0000023 for one associated with a major uncontained oil discharge Drillship blowouts can be expected approximately four times as often as artificial island blowouts Human operator error was found to be the main error source in both systems and geological and environmental factors were also areas of high sensitivity An estimate of the accuracy of the predictions was made Correlation of the calculated probabilities with historical world statistics was adequate Drilling International ,1978
