

Structure and Function of Living Cells

Adapted from: Pong, William, and Steve, Laboratory Manual for General Biology (2nd Edition)

Laboratory Objectives

After completing this structure, you will be able to:

1. Define cell, cell theory, prokaryotic, eukaryotic, nucleus, cytoplasmic matrix, organelle, mitochondrion, cytoplasmic streaming, and pH, vesicles;
2. List three essential features shared by all cells;
3. Describe the similarities and differences between prokaryotic and eukaryotic cells;
4. Identify the cell parts described in the exercises;
5. State the function for three cell parts;
6. Classify cells according to their shape and animal cells;
7. Recognize the grossly-organized cell structure in the grossly-organized.

Introduction

Structurally and functionally, all life has one common feature: all living organisms are composed of cells. The development of this concept began with Robert Hooke's observations of cork tissue and grew more and more up of small units. The smallest living units "cells" because their structure consisted of a cell wall and the small molecules that make up the cell. The cell theory states that all living organisms are composed of cells, the cell is the basic unit of organization, and all cells arise from pre-existing cells.

Although cells vary in organization, size, and function, all share three essential features: (1) all possess a plasma membrane defining the boundary of the living material; (2) all contain a region of high concentration of solutes, which is the cytoplasm; and (3) all contain organelles, everything within the plasma membrane that is not part of the cell boundary.
