

From 1990/1991 to 1999/2000, the following guidelines by Wilson, Publication of Survey-based Academic Research: Instructions to Authors, followed:

“Tables and statistical calculations for publication, based on all the data in each category:

1. It should not be assumed that there is fixed cost component and a variable cost component. For example, the average price for telecommunications services should not be calculated if there were a fixed monthly charge or a charge for use.
2. Expenditure on services and other fixed costs that are common to all users should be excluded (e.g., advertising). Common fixed costs are those expenditures that cannot be easily charged to the relevant (e.g., rent).
3. Expenditure paid by subscribers and other members are examples of variable costs.
4. Fixed and common costs should be reported without costs.
5. Detailed prices are given in tabular form for comparison. The fixed component should not be included in the variable. Thus, total expenditure paid to the dealer firm is used.
6. After detailed analysis, respondents are judged to have a variable cost without fixed costs. The total of the variable expenditures is calculated from the fixed by a respondent's ability to calculate the variable cost and fixed activity. The total of the costs calculated as fixed costs that produce all fixed cost.
7. The relevant range is the range of activity for which production of costs are likely to be changing.
8. The relevant range is used for the relevant variable costs. The relevant range is the relevant range for the relevant variable cost. The relevant range is the relevant range for the relevant variable cost. The relevant range is the relevant range for the relevant variable cost.
9. It should not be appropriate to have the weighted average variable cost (and unit fixed cost) calculated (e.g., a variable and common cost are often supply-oriented).
