

Paper #4 - The Research Paper

The research paper is very similar to the other papers you've written this semester in that it combines those analytic elements you've already used (such as in close readings/explications/thematic analysis) with research to produce an in-depth examination of a work or works in seven to nine pages. The research paper is the culmination of your semester of writing papers. Because of this, your research paper is worth a total of 25 percent of your grade (five percent of your total grade is your annotated bibliography; 20 percent of your total grade is your paper). For this paper, you will be asked to find a work or related works that we've read in class and find a question that the text provokes. Afterwards, research your topic and answer your question within your paper. Remember that asking yourself a question is important; Booth, Colomb, and Williams state in The Craft of Research, "If a writer asks no question worth pondering, he can offer no focused answer worth reading" (45).

Research topics should be appropriately narrow so that you may actually solve your question within seven to nine pages. Topics should be narrow enough to be fresh ideas, or ideas that hopefully no one has written about before. As Booth, Colomb, and Williams state, "A research topic is an interest defined narrowly enough for you to imagine becoming a local expert on it" (41).

Pick a work or a couple of works that we've read that you're interested in, but make sure you have a strong interest in it (or them). Think of a question that your work (or works) provokes, which can serve for your topic. Then narrow your topic. Research your topic with credible sources. And last, write your paper and cite your sources properly. Research papers are the simplest to define.

Research: What it is.

A research paper is the culmination and final product of an involved process of research, critical thinking, source evaluation, organization, and composition. It is, perhaps, helpful to think of the research paper
