The authors conclude that the proposed mechanism could have some other important implications for understanding the mechanism of the drug. It predicts one of the groups around the pyridine ring must be  $\text{H}_2\text{C}$ . This mechanism is also often considered with a possible effect of  $\text{H}_2\text{C}$  systems. Before this mechanism is accepted, an experiment must be done to determine whether having another  $\text{H}_2\text{C}$  group will have any effect on separating the two enantiomers. The authors suggest the drug may actually be an  $\text{H}_2\text{C}$  system, which would not be unusual.
