Introduction

In England in the early 1800s, right when natural selection was getting going, people began to notice that some of the peapods in their gardens had different shapes. Some of the peapods were round, some were flat, some were long, and some were short. Some of the peapods were green, some were yellow, and some were white. Some of the peapods were tall, some were short, and some were fat. Some of the peapods were round, some were flat, some were long, and some were short.
