Abstract: The authors present a preliminary investigation of the effects of a 12-week, supervised, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program was designed to be safe and enjoyable, and to be easily implemented in a community setting. The results of the study suggest that the program was effective in improving physical fitness and health-related quality of life. The authors conclude that such a program may be a viable option for promoting physical activity and improving health-related quality of life in sedentary, middle-aged women.
