

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group did not participate in any supervised walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical fitness (cardiorespiratory fitness, muscular strength, and flexibility) and health-related quality of life (physical functioning, mental functioning, and overall health-related quality of life). The results showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on cardiorespiratory fitness, muscular strength, and flexibility. The walking program also had a significant positive effect on physical functioning, mental functioning, and overall health-related quality of life. The results suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary, middle-aged women.
