I Have Met The Devil Antywan Smith, 2014-12-03 The line drawn between insanity and sanity is nothing more than the ability to have an experience witnessed Truth is if enough people can validate an experience the less likely it is that it will be labeled impossible or crazy Where does that leave a person when dealing with feelings Often we are not able to confirm the emotions of an individual Sure we can listen to their accounts of an event but the process of confirming the intensity of their personal experience would be difficult After all it is all based upon feelings If you close your eyes and touch your arm did that happen Yes How do you know since you were the only person to feel the sensation Did you physically see it happen Chances are with your eyes closed you did not Was anyone else there to witness thus validating the experience If we are to follow traditional means of diagnoses where your sensation has to be confirmed by the senses of an observer the act of explaining a feeling without seeing it happen could be the mark of insanity How do we explain what no one else can feel or see When we make a choice to explore the unknown an attempt to answer that which possibly has no explanation we should be wise about the chosen cave One may stumble upon the mouth of hell while searching for the gates of heaven
