provides a source of food and nutrients contributes to income and affects food prices Exploring agriculture and nutrition linkages in Bangladesh using data from a multi round district level panel a study finds that rice yields are associated with earlier introduction of complementary foods to young children as well as increases in their weight for height Heady and Hoddinott 2016 Agriculture can also have effects on women s health nutrition empowerment and time allocation which can have important consequences for their ability to care for family members Given these links agriculture has the potential to be a strong driver of nutrition However that potential is not being fully realized in Bangladesh because traditionally nutrition and agricultural policies have been uncoordinated Low status of women and gender gaps in health and education contribute to chronic child undernutrition Smith et al 2003 and food insecurity von Grebmer et al 2009 even when other determinants of food security such as per capita incomes improve According to an IFPRI study women are key actors within the food system but are historically disempowered in Bangladesh in terms of leadership in the community control of resources and control of income Sraboni Quisumbing and Ahmed 2014a The lack of women s empowerment weakens the links between agriculture and nutrition Despite increases in 2 women s participation in agriculture in Bangladesh in recent years Asaduzzaman 2010 women face persistent obstacles particularly due to social and economic constraints which limit their further inclusion in agriculture Women have limited control over agricultural assets as well as limited mobility to go to markets to sell agricultural produce often relying on husbands and sons to take produce to market 1 2 Motivation for the Study IFPRI research in Bangladesh using data from a nationally representative household survey conducted by IFPRI reveals that women s empowerment plays a key role in improving household food security and dietary diversity of children women and other household members Sraboni et al 2014b Malapit et al 2015 The study also shows that agricultural production diversity is associated with dietary diversity Sraboni et al 2014b Further IFPRI research in Bangladesh shows that nutrition behavior change communication BCC training imparted to women and men in rural households leads to significant improvements in child nutrition and complementary feeding practices Ahmed et al 2016 Menon et al 2016 Motivated by research based evidence IFPRI researchers developed a concept note to strengthen the agriculture nutrition gender nexus in Bangladesh and presented it to the Ministry of Agriculture MOA Government of the People s Republic of Bangladesh in June 2014 Based on the concept note an inter ministerial committee of the Government of Bangladesh approved a pilot research project entitled Orienting Agriculture Toward Improved Nutrition and Women s Empowerment also known as Agriculture Nutrition and Gender Linkages ANGeL for implementation by the MOA with technical assistance from IFPRI and Helen Keller International HKI and an evaluation led by IFPRI The Minister of Agriculture officially launched the pilot project in October 2015 The project is jointly funded by the Government of Bangladesh and USAID 1 3 The Baseline Report As part of the evaluation of the ANGeL Project IFPRI carried out a baseline survey of project participants and a comparison group of households just before the start of project interventions This report presents the results of the ANGeL baseline survey It is
