Abstract: Individuals with a history of suicidal ideation and behavior are at an elevated risk for future suicidal ideation and behavior. This study examined the effectiveness of a brief, manualized, and structured intervention for suicidal ideation and behavior. The intervention was delivered by a mental health professional and consisted of a series of four sessions. The intervention was evaluated in a randomized controlled trial. The results of the trial indicated that the intervention was effective in reducing suicidal ideation and behavior. The intervention was also found to be cost-effective. The results of this study suggest that the intervention is a promising approach to the treatment of suicidal ideation and behavior.
