

24 Glass

Glass is a key element in modern architecture. It is a material that is both transparent and reflective, allowing light to pass through while also reflecting the surrounding environment. This creates a dynamic and ever-changing facade that responds to the viewer's perspective and the changing light conditions of the day.

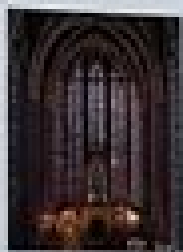

From light to glass to concrete building systems

The first step in the process of creating a glass facade is the selection of the glass itself. There are many different types of glass available, each with its own unique properties and characteristics. For example, some glasses are designed to be highly reflective, while others are designed to be highly transparent. The choice of glass will depend on the specific requirements of the building and the desired aesthetic effect.

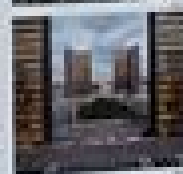

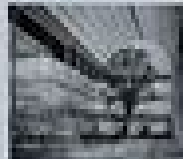

Once the glass has been selected, the next step is to design the building system that will support it. This involves creating a structural framework that can hold the glass in place and provide the necessary support and stability. The design of the building system will depend on the size and shape of the glass panels and the specific requirements of the building.

Finally, the glass panels are installed into the building system. This is a complex process that requires careful planning and execution. The glass panels must be handled with care to avoid any damage or breakage. Once the glass is in place, the building system is completed, and the facade is ready for use.

The resulting glass facade is a beautiful and functional element of modern architecture. It allows natural light to enter the building, creating a bright and airy atmosphere. It also reflects the surrounding environment, creating a dynamic and ever-changing facade that responds to the viewer's perspective and the changing light conditions of the day.
