Male black identity in selected works by Langston Hughes Sarah Wienand, 2014-03-24 Bachelor Thesis from the year 2013 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Literature grade 2.0 University of Wuppertal language English abstract Throughout many years African Americans have been struggling in defining and constructing their identity especially male African Americans had problems to build up self esteem and to reassure their cultural masculinity which was undermined by white men Not only does history confirm this struggle but so does literature In literature many different aspects about male black identity and their struggle for identity can be found However one of the most important authors in this context is Langston Hughes In his works he focuses on the urban life of African Americans and the problems they had to face because of oppression and racism evoked by white Americans Furthermore Hughes wanted to record and interpret the lives of the common black folk their thoughts and habits and dreams their struggle for political freedom and economic well being

Jemie 1 By doing so in his writings he took this struggle for and negotiation of racial identity to another level in developing a unique form of expression In this thesis I will concentrate on three major works by Langston Hughes Mulatto A Tragedy of the Deep South Simple speaks his mind and Not without laughter All three texts display emotional conflicts and the struggle for identity of African American men with simplicity and depth Tidwell 3 Furthermore all three protagonists have a rather low status in society which contributes according to Langston Hughes to their authenticity since they are the ones who represent the African American and thus their pursuit of identity of Tidwell 3 Moreover I am going to begin with a general overview of the male black identity and the struggle for an African American male perspective in a culture which is dominated by white American men Afterwards I will transfer this concept of male black identity to the three selected works by Langston Hughes and analyse in how far these texts engage in constructing their main characters in similar terms The next significant aspect will be concerned with the question in how far education is perceived as a part of this male black identity and in how far it supports the development of an African American male identity When having discussed the influence of education in the protagonists male black identity development I am going to turn to the topic of identity crisis

My Dear Boy Carrie Hughes,2013-11-15 My Dear Boy brings a largely unexplored dimension of Langston Hughes to light Carmaletta Williams and John Edgar Tidwell explain that scholars have neglected the vital role that correspondence between Carrie Hughes and her son Langston Harlem Renaissance icon renowned poet playwright fiction writer autobiographer and essayist played in his work The more than 120 heretofore unexamined letters presented here are a veritable treasure trove of insights into the relationship between mother Carrie and her renowned son Langston Until now a scholarly consensus had begun to emerge accepting the idea of their lives and his art as simple and transparent But as Williams and Tidwell argue this correspondence is precisely where scholars should start in order to understand the underlying complexity in Carrie and Langston s relationship By employing Family Systems Theory for the first time in Hughes scholarship they demonstrate that it is an essential heuristic for analyzing the Hughes family and its influence on his work The study takes the critical truism about Langston s reticence to reveal his inner self and shows how his responses to Carrie were usually not in return letters but instead in his created art Thus My Dear Boy reveals the difficult negotiations between family and art that Langston engaged in as he attempted to sustain an elusive but enduring artistic reputation

Honor Bound David Leverenz, 2012-03-27 As Bill Clinton said in his second inaugural address, "The divide of race has been America's constant curse." In Honor Bound, David Leverenz explores the past to the present of that divide. He argues that in the United States, the rise and decline of white people's racial shaming reflect the rise and decline of white honor. White skin and black skin are fictions of honor and shame. Americans have lived those fictions for over four hundred years. To make his argument, Leverenz casts an unusually wide net, from ancient and modern cultures of honor to social, political, and military history to American literature and popular culture. He highlights the convergence of whiteness and honor in the United States from the antebellum period to the present. The Civil War, the civil rights movement, and the election of Barack Obama represent racial progress; the Tea Party movement represents the latest recoil. From exploring African American narratives to examining a 2009 episode of Hardball in which two white commentators restore their honor by mocking U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder after he called Americans cowards for not talking more about race, Leverenz illustrates how white honor has prompted racial shaming and humiliation. The United States became a nation state in which light-skinned people declared themselves white. The fear masked by white honor surfaces in such classics of American literature as The Scarlet Letter and Adventures of Huckleberry Finn and in the U.S. wars against the Barbary pirates from 1783 to 1815 and the Iraqi insurgents from 2003 to the present. John McCain's Faith of My Fathers is used to frame the 2008 presidential campaign as white honor's last national stand. Honor Bound concludes by probing the endless attempts in 2009 and 2010 to preserve white honor through racial shaming from the birthers and Tea Party protests to Joe Wilson's "You lie" in Congress and the arrest of Henry Louis Gates Jr. at the front door of his own home. Leverenz is optimistic that in the twenty-first century, racial shaming is itself becoming shameful.
