

Self-assessment of level of knowledge in each subject is the second step in the preparations of final examinations. Before the beginning of the preparations, the student should decide which subjects need more attention and which subjects need less attention since he is the only one who knows his mastery in different subjects very well.

Time management is the third and most important step in the preparations of final examinations. More time should be allocated to difficult subjects and less time should be allocated to easy subjects. The student should prepare a time schedule for his activities until the final examinations are over. He should divide his day time and night time into different time segments prior to the final examinations. Meanwhile, the student may find difficulties in learning a particular topic. Under such circumstances, group study may help him. So, he should allocate sufficient time for group study while preparing time schedules for the preparations of his final examinations. Lengthy activities should be reduced as much as possible during this period. Spending too much time on a difficult topic just before the examination is not advisable. Such habits will prevent the student from learning other topics. Difficult topics should be learned well before the commencement of examinations so that tensions and frustrations can be avoided later.

Division of the contents into small capsules is the fourth step in the preparations of examinations. It is difficult for a student to understand complicated things, if he tries to learn it at a stretch. Knowledge is digestible only if it is swallowed as capsules. "When it comes to studying, start early and start small. Begin reviewing several days out from the final exam and do only short reviews that are meant to refamiliarize you with material you haven't seen in a while" (How to prepare for final exams). "Learning material in smaller "chunks" will be more effective and far less stressful than cramming a few days before" (Mrs. Mazzullo)
