

"You asked for this, you deserve. I'll kill you. Your tricks won't help you. I carry a turtle stone."

Cersei smiled. The reputation of turtle stone was as mistaken as it was popular. But the witcher was not going to lose his earnings on spells much less expose his stone used to contact with Cersei's Maids. He dove under the whirling Maids and, with the heel of his hand and his silver stabbed out, hit him in the temple.

VI

Cersei quickly regained consciousness and looked around in the total darkness. He noticed that he was tied up. He did not see Cersei standing right beside him. But he realised where he was and let out a pained, seething howl.

"Keep quiet," said the witcher. "Otherwise you'll lose her ear before her time."

are like friends from small towns They are honest warm occasionally lyrical and as strange and idiosyncratic as the rest of us Arthur Sabatini During the last decade of his life author Jack Matthews wrote a series of 12 page prose pieces which he dubbed Abruptions or very short stories that end abruptly Matthews had already published over 20 books of fiction with an astonishing variety of characters and plots This last volume hints at a lot of characters and plots without trying to resolve them Each abruption which rarely takes more than 5 minutes to read shed light on something unexpected whether it be a character's view on life or the reader's notions of how the world ought to work Many episodes read like contemporary fables or sketches of quirky people from small midwest towns Two older women have a long running feud about what flowers should go on the fence between their houses An actor makes a living out of playing the bad Nazi in movies An owner of a movie studio in the 1930s throws out any audience member who misbehaves during a movie An office worker is distracted by a pretty woman washing the outside windows Other stories sound like wild fairy tales What if one superintelligent Siamese twin were conjoined with an idiot brother What if a witch's curse caused every third word uttered by a person to go unsaid What if a woman has terrifying dreams about a missing watch Some stories simply ponder the imponderable Why do certain memories persist or reappear Why do elderly people become set in their ways Why do people become blind to certain things Matthews explains in the book's preface that abruptions can reach down to dimensions of wonder and speculation that are commonly thought to be the proper domain of poetry These stories are a fitting coda for Matthew's career as a storyteller As deep and dark as these abruptions can become they are told with simple language flashes of humor and a sage's sense of wonder and irony
