Introduction

Apart from Leadership knowledge, the Leadership Experience Program continues to be of great value to me regarding my attributes. Conducting the Drive Safe 365Challenges project has illuminated my skills in running an operation in an organizational or social situation. Both the motivations and the challenges have played in ensuring my effectiveness as a leader as well as a team player. In my view, I believe that the program has prepared me well in a wide range of aspects concerning character building.

First, I think that the exercise has enabled me to articulate and act on my core values, ethics and a sense of purpose in the world. Notably, handling my team to the successful completion of the task has enabled me to grow my inner-self. I believe my self-realization contributed to my effective leadership that saw the success of the entire mission. It is important to note that management is not only about inspiring others but also looking after oneself. According to George and his colleagues, a leader should first go through a self-discovery process to lead others effectively (2007). Importantly, the process of knowing oneself is referred to as authenticity which advocates for the person be true to oneself (George et al., 2007). Moreover, being authentic inspires self-analysis that helps a person to discover the tenets that drive his/her actions such as ethical values and purposes (George et al., 2007). Chiefly, authenticity grants an individual the courage to pursue his/her ambitions despite the existence of challenges (George et al., 2007).

Basing on the Boise Project, the program required a lot of courage to be launch. I now believe that success would have impossible if I had not discovered my inner-self and purpose. For instance, I had not been comfortable with the increased teen's deaths due to reckless driving. Therefore, my self-identification enabled me to craft a plan that would help in tackling this issue. Moreover, articulating on my strengths gave me the confidence of implementing such a big project that would help save lives in Boise.

Nevertheless, I managed to overcome the difficulties through my inner values. For instance, I advocate for equal treatment regardless of people's diversity concerning culture, social classes, and beliefs. Hence, it is evident that I required this stance in ensuring that I eradicated biases among participants to achieve the objective of the task.

Consequently, the project was beneficial in reflecting on my strengths and areas of improvement as a leader and as a person. One essential benefits of practical project management is that individuals get the chance to practice their skills to gauge their competency (Collins, 2006). Notably, identifying personal strengths motivates n individual to perform better as well as to adopt new strategies in excelling performances (Collins 2006).

Well, I can say that the LEAD Program enabled me to discover my problem-solving skills. As mentioned in the previous reflection, my program faced three significant challenges which were Time management, Biases among Participants and Financial strains. As the manager of the group, I was tasked with ensuring smooth operations of activities which meant that it was my responsibility
