Abstract
The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of aerobic and resistance exercises. The control group did not exercise. Physical fitness was measured by maximum heart rate, maximum oxygen consumption, and maximum power. Health was measured by blood pressure, cholesterol, and body weight. The results showed that the exercise group had significantly higher maximum heart rate, maximum oxygen consumption, and maximum power than the control group. The exercise group also had significantly lower blood pressure, cholesterol, and body weight than the control group. These results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve physical fitness and health in sedentary middle-aged men.

Abstract
 The purpose of this study was to investigate the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of elderly people. The study was conducted in a community center in Tehran, Iran. The participants were 30 elderly people (15 men and 15 women) aged 65 and above. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program consisting of aerobic exercises, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. The data were collected at the beginning and at the end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the experimental group had significant improvements in physical health (e.g., increased muscle strength, improved balance, and increased endurance) and psychological health (e.g., reduced anxiety and depression, and improved mood) compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively improve the physical and psychological health of elderly people.
