The Endocrine System

Introduction: Hormones are often referred to as "chemical messengers."

These tiny messengers are created and released by one organ, pass into the bloodstream, and regulate the activity of another organ or cell. The pituitary, adipose tissue is created and released by the adipose glands. It is sent into the bloodstream and has impacts on many other organs in our body, such as the heart. Adipose tissue causes fat levels in the blood to increase in a stressful situation. The adrenal glands and the thyroid gland completely different body systems, but thanks to hormones these organs can "communicate."

What makes the hypothalamus? Hypothalamus glands are a distinct group of organs that make and release hormones into the bloodstream. These glands can be found throughout the other body systems throughout the body and collectively make up the endocrine system. In this activity, you will read about each endocrine gland, what it does, and finally learn which hormones it produces.

1. What is a hormone?

2. What is an example of a hormone?

3. What type of glands make hormones?

Hypothalamus

If you've studied the nervous system, you are familiar with the hypothalamus, a part of the brain. The hypothalamus receives information from the brain and bloodstream on the conditions of the body. It responds to this information by creating hormones, which it then sends to the pituitary gland, which hangs from the hypothalamus. The pituitary gland either responds to or sends these hormones to the body's other organs.

Two hormones that the hypothalamus makes and sends to the posterior pituitary gland are oxytocin and antidiuretic hormone (ADH).
