On 10 June 1994, the Journal of the American Medical Association published a study by the University of Washington researchers that reported that women who had ever had an abortion were more likely to have a current mental health problem than those who had not. The study was based on data from the 1988 National Longitudinal Study of Adolescent Health, a large, nationally representative survey of adolescents and young adults. The study found that women who had ever had an abortion were more likely to have a current mental health problem than those who had not, regardless of whether the abortion was voluntary or involuntary. The study also found that women who had ever had an abortion were more likely to have a current mental health problem than those who had not, regardless of whether the abortion was voluntary or involuntary. The study also found that women who had ever had an abortion were more likely to have a current mental health problem than those who had not, regardless of whether the abortion was voluntary or involuntary.
