

several rows and columns, it is often helpful to present them as percentages: common ways to do this involve making the percentages add up to 100 across rows, or down columns, or across the whole table. These facilitate different types of comparison, and a careful choice should be made. The sizes of sample on which a percentage table is based should be made explicit.

Orientation and Order

The orientation of a table can have considerable influence on the readability. It is much easier for a reader to make comparisons within a column of numbers than within a row. Therefore if the purpose of a table is to demonstrate differences between treatments or groups for a number of variables, the groups should define the rows of the table and the variables should define the columns. This is shown in Tables 2a and 2b. Table 2a has the wrong orientation and rows and columns should be interchanged as in Table 2b.

In addition to having the wrong orientation, Table 2a is incorrect in a number of other features. There is an unnecessary number of decimal places and this number is inconsistent within a variable. Also, the diet labels are uninformative and the variables do not have units.

In Table 2b below, the data are the same as Table 2a, except that table has been reorientated, columns and rows have been reordered to highlight differences in growth rates, the number of digits has been reduced and standardized, and more informative labels used.

Table 2a: Mean intakes of milk, supplement and water and mean growth rates for four diets (artificial data). The table is poorly presented.

Diet1 variables	i	ii	iii	iv
Milk Intake	9.82	10.48	8.9	9.15
Supplement intake	0	449.5	363.6	475.6
Growth rate	89	145.32	127.8	131.5
Water intake	108.4	143.6	121.29	127.8

Diet I = Control; Diet II = Lucerne supplement;

Diet III = Leucaena; Diet IV Sesbania.
