Stargardt's Stargardt's disease (also known as Stargardt's macular degeneration) is a rare, inherited form of macular degeneration that causes vision loss. It is caused by a mutation in the ABCA4 gene, which is responsible for the production of a protein called ABCA4. This protein is located in the retina and is responsible for the transport of lipids and other molecules out of the retina. When the ABCA4 gene is mutated, the protein is defective and cannot transport these molecules out of the retina, leading to the accumulation of lipids and other molecules in the retina. This accumulation of lipids and other molecules in the retina leads to the formation of a yellowish-white spot in the center of the retina, which is called a Stargardt's spot. This spot is the result of the accumulation of lipids and other molecules in the retina, which are not being transported out of the retina. The Stargardt's spot is a characteristic feature of Stargardt's disease and is often seen in the center of the retina.
