

Barriers to Trade

The harmonization of national export and import policies, free trade is a system wherein all the goods of governments have the same international trade possibilities for the benefit of their own economies. Once the free trade system has been achieved, many trade barriers, such as tariff regulations, are being torn apart. Examples of these barriers include the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs, the World Trade Organization (WTO), the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), and the North Atlantic Trade Agreement (NAFTA) forum.

However, before the harmonization of national policies, national policies have been such that national output tends to be partly foreign. According to Figure 10, a free product price supports the domestic supply because the domestic government is subsidizing the producers. Domestically well-subsidized, the domestic supply is a multiple of the domestic demand. Suppliers are willing and able to produce at this higher price. If there were no international trade, the equilibrium price would be lower than the domestic price. Suppliers would produce less, and the price would be determined by domestic demand.

Subsidized Trade

It shows a free international trade. The total supply is represented by the production of domestic suppliers (Domestic Supply) and the supply of foreign suppliers (P_2 and quantity Q_2). They are able to produce more of the commodity at a lower price. Also at P_2 , domestic producers are producing Q_3 and foreign producers are producing $Q_2 - Q_3$. Thus, domestic firms are producing less under free trade, whereas foreign firms are able to supply the commodity.
