This involved preparing profiles for each of the seven countries that attempt to assess the social and environmental significance of the coastal management issues, identified their causes, and possible responses. Each profile reviewed and modified at least once in each country at a roundtable discussion attended by a cross section usually of governmental officials, NGOs, and private sector representatives. The first occasions in which policy makers, scientists, and activists met together to discuss the issues affecting the condition of their coasts. This project was carried out by the Coastal Resources Center of The University of Rhode Island with funding from AIID, RD, ENR, and USAID ROCAP. The was co-hosted by the Central American Commission for Environment and Development. This agenda draws from both the country profiles and the discussions at the regional.
