Small-scale farmers, including subsistence farmers and the majority of private agribusiness owners, produce roughly half the output of the country's economy, but only receive a fraction of the government's attention or financial support. This situation contributes to the country's economic stagnation and is a barrier to development. The government should focus on supporting small-scale farmers and agribusinesses, particularly in the areas of credit, extension, and marketing. The government should also focus on supporting the private sector, particularly in the areas of credit, extension, and marketing.
