Abstract.—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 min. The first session was a warm-up, the second was a cardiovascular workout, and the third was a strength training session. The results of the study showed that the men who participated in the program showed significant improvements in their physical fitness and health. Specifically, the men who participated in the program showed significant increases in their cardiovascular endurance, muscular strength, and body composition. Additionally, the men who participated in the program showed significant decreases in their blood pressure and cholesterol levels. These results suggest that a 12-week training program can have a positive effect on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men.
