

The autobiographical narrative interview

A potential arena of emotional remembering, performance and reflection

Maruška Svašek and Markieta Domecka

Introduction

This chapter critically explores the autobiographical narrative method developed by the German sociologist Fritz Schütze.¹ We shall argue that the methodology can help to uncover domains of psycho-social experience that may be hard to reveal using other interviewing techniques. The method includes a close analysis of interview transcriptions, distinguishing particular textual, performative and affective dimensions of self narration. It can provide valuable insights into the ways in which personal experiences and emotional trajectories, partially shaped by kinship dynamics, socio-economic and political processes, can influence identity development and the formation of life attitudes.² As will become clear in this chapter, the method also frequently generates a useful reflective space for interviewees, allowing them to express, communicate and work through painful or confusing past experiences. This is less likely to happen using structured and semi-structured interview techniques, where frequent questions by the interviewer can hamper a process of deep inner reflection.

Emotional remembering in the autobiographical interview context can be experienced by narrators as process that is potentially transformative. New insights can be generated through “biographical work”, understood as reflection about alternative interpretations of one’s life course tendencies, self-critical attempts of understanding one’s own misconceptions of oneself and self-chosen or self-erected impediments, assessment of the impediments superimposed by others and by structural conditions, [and] imagining future courses of life that support the overall gestalt of the unfolding biographical identity (Schütze 2008a: 6).

The analysis will take a processual approach to subjectivity, regarding individuals as dynamic thinking and feeling bodies who experience and project changing, at times contradictory notions of self. Moving through space and time, people are commonly faced with familiar and new situations, experience loving and hostile environments, having to deal with conflicting loyalties and demands. Negotiating, improvising, experimenting and adapting, they take on contextually specific identities, emphasising and underplaying particular aspects of their being; they may also be forced into unwanted positions, a process that, in extreme circumstances, can cause deep traumas. As will become clear in this chapter, when asked to talk about their lives, ambiguities around self and specific others may appear in autobiographical accounts, and are sometimes addressed by autobiographical narrators

¹ Schütze began developing this method in the 1970s; for more recent publications in English, see Schütze 1992; 2003; 2005 [1984], 2008a, 2008b.

² According to Atkinson “in the telling of a life story, we get a good sense of how and why the various parts of a life are connected and what gives the person meaning in life. There may be no better way to answer the question of how people get from where they began to where they are now in life than through their life stories” (Atkinson, 1998: 20).

Ebook: Life-Span Development Santrock, 2016-09-16 Ebook Life Span Development Life-span Development John W. Santrock, 1989 Handbook of Counselor Preparation Garrett McAuliffe, Karen Eriksen, 2011 This definitive single volume guide is the first of its kind on teaching and developing counselor educator programs that embrace constructivist and developmental theory Leading scholars and experts offer practical advice on teaching courses in every area of counseling practice As a result the book is ideal for current and future counselor educators and supervisors as well as faculty in other helping professions The authors seek to inspire educators to empower and involve to risk losing control over subject matter to hear student voices to pose dilemmas and to challenge their own assumptions in the presence of their students using constructivist developmental and experiential thinking and strategies Critical Theories of Psychological Development John M. Broughton, 2013-06-29 Something instructive occurred in the process of entitling the present collection Both editor and publisher sought a simple and succinct rubric for the various pieces of work But they rapidly and reluctantly reached the consensus that by either intellectual or marketing criteria the insertion of the adjective psychological to qualify the noun development was a communicative necessity Much to the chagrin of the developmental psychologist the term development still connotes to the world at large as well as the general community of publishers librarians and computer archivists the modernization of nation states Inside and outside the university I find that when asked What are you interested in I am not at liberty to reply The concept of development without being absorbed immediately into a discussion of Third World studies The approach of the present volume should be taken as an exhortation to psychologists to take the genealogy of development seriously The history of the discipline is not so different from the history of the word and as we shall discover the concern with developmental progress cannot easily be separated from the urge for dominion This volume presents a selection from the recent critical scholarship on psychological development The emphasis is on rethinking the field of developmental psychology at the level of theory Culturally Engaging Service-Learning With Diverse Communities Delano-Oriaran, Omobolade O., Penick-Parks, Marguerite W., Fondrie, Suzanne, 2017-09-13 Evaluating the experiences of racially marginalized and underrepresented groups is vital to creating equality in society. Such actions have the potential to provoke an interest in universities to adopt high impact pedagogical practices that attempt to eliminate institutional injustices. Culturally Engaging Service Learning With Diverse Communities is a pivotal reference source for the latest scholarly research on service learning models that recognize how systemic social injustices continue to pervade society. Featuring extensive coverage on a broad range of topics and perspectives such as cultural humility, oral histories, and social ecology, this book is ideally designed for scholars, practitioners, and students interested in engaging in thoughtful and authentic partnerships with diverse groups.

Psychological Perspectives of Helplessness and Control in the Elderly P.S. Fry, 1988-12-01 The past few years have witnessed widespread acceptance of the notion that few elderly individuals are willing to stand by silently in the process of growing and to relinquish whatever actual controls, autonomy, or control beliefs they had in the past. Increasingly, old age is viewed as the dynamics of growth in mastery, control, and self-efficacy on the one hand, and a relative decline in psychological and physical resources on the other. It is the intent of this volume to communicate both aspects of these changes and to offer a comprehensive review of the cross-fertilization of the field of gerontology and the psychology of reactance, freedom, and control. Leading psychologists and social science researchers from the United States, Canada, and Europe give their views on the meaning and application of control-related constructs having specific implications for the field of human aging. They address themselves to one or more of the major themes, issues, or concerns which currently figure in discussions of control beliefs and control constructs as they apply to aging and old age. Written primarily for scholars, researchers, and developmental theorists interested in the complexities and generativity of control constructs and their applications for the psychological well-being of older adults, the data and issues presented will be equally informative to geropsychologists and mental health professionals concerned with healthy adaptive functioning of the elderly.
