Types of Data

Quantitative - numerical data that can be measured

Qualitative - non-numerical data that describes qualities

Primary - data collected first-hand from the source

Secondary - data collected from existing sources

Discrete - data that can only take specific values

Continuous - data that can take any value within a range

Population - the entire group of individuals being studied

Sample - a subset of the population

Sampling - the process of selecting a sample from a population

Random Sampling - every member of the population has an equal chance of being selected

Systematic Sampling - selecting every kth member of the population

Stratified Sampling - dividing the population into strata and sampling from each

Cluster Sampling - dividing the population into clusters and sampling from one or more clusters

Measures of Central Tendency

Mean - the average of a set of values

Median - the middle value of a set of values

Mode - the most frequent value in a set of values

Range - the difference between the highest and lowest values

Interquartile Range (IQR) - the range between the first and third quartiles

Standard Deviation - a measure of the spread of data

Variance - the square of the standard deviation

Coefficient of Variation - a measure of the relative variability of a set of data

Probability

Sample Space - the set of all possible outcomes of an experiment

Event - a subset of the sample space

Probability - the chance of an event occurring

Independent Events - events that do not affect each other

Healthcare - using statistics to study disease patterns and treatment effectiveness

Education - using statistics to evaluate student performance and teaching methods

Finance - using statistics to analyze market trends and investment risks

Politics - using statistics to understand public opinion and election results

Systematic Sampling

To find the interval - divide the population size by the sample size

Example: Population = 100, Sample = 10, Interval = 10

Start at a random point and select every 10th member of the population

Advantages: Simple, unbiased, easy to implement

Disadvantages: May miss patterns, requires a list of the population

Stratified Sampling

Divide the population into strata based on a characteristic

Sample from each stratum in proportion to its size in the population

Example: Population = 100 (50 Male, 50 Female), Sample = 20 (10 Male, 10 Female)

Advantages: Represents the population well, reduces bias

Disadvantages: Requires knowledge of population characteristics, more complex than simple random sampling

Cluster Sampling

Divide the population into clusters

Randomly select one or more clusters

Sample all members of the selected cluster(s)

Example: Population = 100 (10 Clusters of 10), Sample = 20 (2 Clusters)

Advantages: Simple, cost-effective, good for large populations

Disadvantages: May miss individual differences within clusters, requires a list of clusters

Measures of Dispersion

Range - the difference between the highest and lowest values

Interquartile Range (IQR) - the range between the first and third quartiles

Standard Deviation - a measure of the spread of data

Variance - the square of the standard deviation

Coefficient of Variation - a measure of the relative variability of a set of data

Measures of Central Tendency/Averages

Mean - the average of a set of values
