

Game theory often studies interdependent decisions—the outcome for each player depends on the actions of the other.

This chapter has focused on the concerns of realists—the interests of states, distribution of power among states, bargaining between states, and alliances of states. The chapter has treated states as unitary actors, much as one would analyze the interactions of individual people. The actions of state leaders have been treated as concerned with maximizing power through pursuing definable interests through coherent bargaining strategies. But realism is not the only way to frame the major issues of international relations. Chapter 3 reexamines these themes critically, relying less on the core principle of dominance and more on reciprocity and identity.

SUMMARY

- Realism explains international relations in terms of power.
- Realists and idealists differ in their assumptions about human nature, international order, and the potential for peace.
- Power can be conceptualized as influence or as capabilities that can create influence.
- The realist perspective is based on the assumption that states are unitary actors that act in their own self-interest.
- Realists believe that the international system is anarchic, meaning that there is no central authority that can enforce rules or laws.
- Realists believe that states are constantly competing for power and that this competition is the primary driver of international relations.
- Realists believe that the only way to ensure peace is through a balance of power, where no single state or group of states is powerful enough to dominate the others.
- Realists believe that international law is largely irrelevant, as states will only follow it when it serves their interests.
- Realists believe that the only way to resolve international conflicts is through negotiation and diplomacy, where each side seeks to achieve its goals while minimizing its losses.
- Realists believe that the only way to ensure a just and peaceful world is through a system of checks and balances, where no single state or group of states is powerful enough to dominate the others.
- Realists believe that the only way to ensure a just and peaceful world is through a system of checks and balances, where no single state or group of states is powerful enough to dominate the others.
