Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week resistance training program on the strength and endurance of the lower extremities of sedentary individuals. The subjects were 15 sedentary individuals, 10 males and 5 females, aged 20-30 years. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group performed no exercise, while the experimental group performed a 12-week resistance training program. The subjects were tested at baseline and at 12 weeks. The tests included a 10-minute step test, a 10-minute sit-to-stand test, and a 10-minute heel raise test. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher strength and endurance than the control group at 12 weeks. The results also showed that the experimental group had significantly higher strength and endurance than the control group at baseline. The results suggest that a 12-week resistance training program can improve the strength and endurance of the lower extremities of sedentary individuals.
