

Barriers to Trade

The harmonization of national export and import regulations, free trade is a system wherein all the goods and quantities are free to flow across international frontiers for the benefit of their own economies. Once the free trade system is in place, there have been various international trade agreements, which are driving the world. Examples of these include the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs (GATT), the World Trade Organization (WTO), the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP), and the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP).

However, there are some challenges to the economic adjustment arising from trade that cannot be ignored. In particular, the adjustment to trade in the long run is not smooth. Some argue that the adjustment to the economy is slower than anticipated due to imperfectly mobile resources and other factors. The adjustment process may involve substantial adjustment frictions, such as rising and falling prices of other factors, prices of those resources, adjustment frictions, migration, loss of jobs, etc. The adjustment process may be a long and painful one, and it may be necessary to provide some form of adjustment assistance.

International Trade
