Pamphlets and Tracts, ... Found in the Late Earl of Oxford's Library; Interspersed with Historical, Political and Critical Notes Etc Robert Earl of Oxford and Mortimer Harley, 1746 The Duty of Reformation in Light of God's Mercies Thomas Gouge, C. Matthew McMahon, 2017-10-04 This treatise is about reformation It is set within the framework of being more holy because reformation means reformation of life in light of Jesus Christ's saving benefits and God's abundant saving mercies What makes this treatise so excellent is not only its theological and practical depth and it is deep but its vivid directness Gouge uncompromisingly from Ezra 9:13-14 is going to tell Christians not just sinners that if they sin expect judgment And if Christians sin collectively as a Christian nation expect collective judgment Gouge says When Christians will not reform their ways God replies they have not minded my mercies I will not mind their miseries Christians around the world need true biblical and spiritual reformation Even though God has given Christians blessing upon blessing and mercy piled onto mercy if Christians answer God s abundant blessing by sinning against him what then should they expect As Gouge shows If reformation can only be regarded as a suitable compensation to God s mercies to us we are without it In other words Christians must be about the work of reformation post haste This work is not a scan or facsimile has been carefully transcribed by hand being made easy to read in modern English and has an active table of contents for electronic versions
