severe budgetary constraints a radically reduced force structure and a crippling intellectual dogmatism the American Infantry struggled throughout the interwar years to modernize its doctrine Finlayson examines these difficulties beginning with an overview of the experiences of the primary combatants of the First World War comparing their battlefield doctrines with that of the American Expeditionary Force The brief American appearance on the battlefield did much to shape the convictions of those men assigned the task of developing doctrine after the war The findings of the post World War I Superior Board provide valuable insight into how institutional conservatism and the dogmatic approach to new ideas that existed among senior Army leaders stymied possible doctrinal advances The Army would suffer greatly in the post war demobilization and the subsequent ravages of the Great Depression With little money and few soldiers spread around far flung posts little advancement in terms of doctrinal development was possible As the likelihood of war became more imminent in the 1930s a concerted effort to modernize was made however the magnitude of the task made success virtually impossible a situation that was evident in the Infantry's poor performance in the early battles of the war The U S entry into World war II would unfortunately find the infantry branch only partially prepared for the battle field of 1942
