

Barriers to Trade

The harmonization of national export and import regulations, free trade is a system wherein all the goods of governments have the same international trade possibilities for the benefit of their own economies. Once the free trade system has been achieved, many trade barriers, such as tariff regulations, are being torn apart. Examples of these barriers include the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs, the World Trade Organization (WTO), the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), and the North Atlantic Trade Agreement (NAFTA) forum.

However, before the harmonization of national export and import laws that would allow goods to pass freely between nations, the United States, for example, often protected some segments of the domestic market because it wanted the manufacturing and agricultural industries well developed. The domestic supply of a commodity sometimes becomes sufficient to satisfy and protect producers of other nations' goods. If there were no international trade in commodities, for example, the price of a commodity in a domestic market, P_1 , would be protected only by domestic forces.

International Trade

If there is free international trade, the total supply for imports, the price in the domestic market, and the quantity demanded will be P_2 and quantity Q_2 . There are three domestic levels of free trade: the first lower price, P_3 , at P_3 , domestic demand is Q_3 and foreign producers are producing $Q_2 - Q_3$. When domestic demand is greater than foreign supply, imports would flow into the country to help supply the country's needs.
