Wetlands for Remediation in the Tropics Tatiana Lobato de Magalhães, Marinus L. Otte, 2023-01-25 This edited volume provides a review of remediation approaches utilizing aquatic and wetland macrophytes in the Tropics This form of phytotechnology has exceptional potential as a sustainable nature based solution but that potential is not commonly utilized in the Tropics Constructed wetlands for improvement of water quality are cost effective offering affordable solutions for remediation in warm and tropical regions worldwide The robustness simplicity and reliability of treatment wetlands provide efficient long term operation Wetlands for Remediation in the Tropics covers theory provides case studies and identifies gaps in our current understanding It highlights why the Tropics differ from temperate regions in this context particularly concerning differences in climate and species diversity and abundance Urban rural and industrial examples are discussed across 11 chapters These nature based solutions including the concept of Sponge City can be applied to tropical areas worldwide and incorporated particularly in highly urbanized regions The authors from Argentina Australia Brazil Canada Colombia the USA the Netherlands Mexico Pakistan and Taiwan all have substantial research experience using wetlands for remediation The topic of this book is relevant not only to scholars and academics but also to practitioners and government officials from developing countries where scarce resources and a lack of a qualified workforce are common but large differences exist in history culture regulations climate water fluctuations and vegetation Although ideas based on experiences from temperate regions can be applied the Tropics require distinct approaches to developing constructed wetlands for remediation     The Higher Education Institutions Handbook ,2012     Proceedings of 2005 JKUAT Scientific, Technological, and Industrialisation Conference ,2006
