Question 9 (10 marks)

1. The first step in the process of creating a new product is to identify a market need. This involves conducting market research to understand the preferences and behaviors of potential customers. Once a need is identified, the next step is to develop a concept that addresses this need. This concept should be innovative and differentiated from existing products in the market.

2. After developing a concept, the next step is to create a prototype. This allows the company to test the feasibility of the product and gather feedback from potential users. The prototype should be functional and represent the key features of the final product. Based on the feedback received, the company can make necessary adjustments to the design and functionality.

3. Once the prototype is refined, the next step is to conduct a small-scale pilot test. This involves producing a limited quantity of the product and distributing it to a select group of customers. The purpose of the pilot test is to evaluate the product's performance in a real-world setting and gather valuable feedback from actual users. This feedback can be used to make further improvements to the product.

4. After the pilot test, the company can proceed to a full-scale production. This involves manufacturing the product in larger quantities and distributing it to a wider market. The company should monitor the product's performance and customer feedback closely during this stage to ensure that it meets the market's expectations. If necessary, the company can make further adjustments to the product or its marketing strategy.

5. Finally, the company should evaluate the success of the new product launch. This involves analyzing sales data, customer feedback, and market trends to determine the product's overall performance. If the product is successful, the company can consider expanding its distribution and exploring opportunities for future product development. If the product is not successful, the company can learn from the experience and apply the lessons learned to future product development efforts.
