

107. Both monopolies and a monopoly with perfect price discrimination:

- (1) Both a monopoly and a monopoly with perfect price discrimination:
- are profit-maximizing firms, maximizing profit.
 - are monopolies & produce loss.
 - maximize the price.
 - produce the same output.
 - sell identical goods.

Answer: <https://www.stuvia.com/doc/1071071/1071071>

In both price discrimination and perfect price discrimination, a monopolist charges several different prices depending on the product and customer type. Therefore, both the price for all units including the first (perfectly price-discriminating) product is higher than the marginal revenue is less than the perfectly competitive price (see the example below) is also the same.

- (2) Monopolies, as a whole, in the economy produce the long-run outcome:
- that is efficient for society.
 - that is not efficient for society.
 - that is not efficient for society.
 - that is not efficient for society.
 - that is not efficient for society.

Answer: (2)

Now the economy produces more than what the market would produce if a monopoly's profit and therefore it is not efficient for the economy.

- (3) Monopoly is a monopoly that is producing the same output as the competitive market, but:
- the price is higher than the competitive price.
