

Abstract: This study investigated the effects of a 12-week, supervised, group-based, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical and psychological health of 100 sedentary, middle-aged women. The program was designed to improve cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and body composition. The program was evaluated using a variety of measures, including heart rate, blood pressure, body mass index, and self-reported mood. The results of the study showed that the program had a positive effect on all of the measures. The women who participated in the program showed a significant increase in heart rate, blood pressure, body mass index, and self-reported mood. The program was well-received by the women, and they reported that they enjoyed the program and that it helped them to feel better about themselves and their health.
