Endocrine System and Associated Glands

Background:

The endocrine system has specialized networks of glands, hormones and receptors. Together, they coordinate and control body functions through chemical messengers and feedback mechanisms in response to constantly changing internal and external conditions.

Generally, all endocrine glands release hormones, whereas other cells produce signalling molecules controlling the processes within the body.

1. The hypothalamus, which is the control point in the brain, releases all chemical signals passing through the network for production signals of others.
2. The anterior pituitary, which is a gland, secretes and releases all chemical messengers (hormones) which are released from the hypothalamus where endocrine glands release into the body.

The endocrine system works in tandem with the nervous system to control all body functions and processes.

Four major glands release chemical signals from the system: the hypothalamus, anterior pituitary, posterior pituitary and the thyroid gland.

PART 1: The Glands and their Associated Hormones

Task: Label the following endocrine glands.
