Abstract: This study was designed to investigate the effects of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of young adults. The study was conducted in a university setting and involved 100 participants who were randomly assigned to either a control group or an experimental group. The experimental group underwent a 12-week training program that included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. Data were collected at baseline, 6 weeks, and 12 weeks. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and lower levels of psychological stress compared to the control group at all three time points. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively improve physical and psychological health in young adults.
