Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week walking program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The walking program was designed to be low-intensity and supervised. The program consisted of three walking sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The walking speed was set at 1.5 miles per hour. The program was supervised by a research assistant who monitored the participants' heart rate and walking speed. The control group was instructed to remain sedentary. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The participants were recruited from a local community. The study was approved by the Institutional Review Board. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the participants. The walking program resulted in a significant increase in walking distance, a significant decrease in heart rate, and a significant decrease in anxiety. The walking program also resulted in a significant increase in self-esteem and a significant decrease in depression. The walking program was well-tolerated by the participants. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
